It is

if it is bound to save the life of a wounded man, the proper course is to take him where he can receive surgical aid. Plasters, ointments, and such remedies will not reset a broken limb, or restore a mutilated member. Many of the patients are wise enough to know this fact, and to appreciate the benefits derived from European surgical skill. It is most probable that, if the injured Chinese are given their choice, the majority will elect to go where they can obtain these benches, and escape the prospect in the Tung Wah Hospital of a lingering and painful death for want of surgical assistance. They should certainly be allowed the option. and there would be little fear of the ultimate result. The idea, however, that European surgoons are recklessly in the use of the knife cannot be too strongly contradicted, and it is to be hoped. for their own sakes, that the Chinese will not allow themselves to be persuaded that such is the case. A knowledge of surgery is one of the great needs in China. In fewgress as in this scionec, and they cannot do better than devote themselves to its study has hitherto met with a warm welcome in China, and it is something new to hear Chinese objecting to their maimed fellowcountrymen being conveyed to a European cut off. POLITICS ARE DEAD. Politics are dead I every question solled. So I hear it said -and it makes me nettled. Questions still are plenty in our little ials: could tell you twenty, if you'll only wait awhile,-Only wait a little, wait a little, wait a little whil

First, there are the poor, mark of every slaughter,

Cesepools at their door, sewage in their water: In cash crowded dwelling poison'd nir and vile; So you'll hear men telling, if you'll only wait a while. Next there is the drink, inconsed source of rule t Madness, marder, riot, on it all they smile i.

But the men keep quiet, yet it's only for a while. Then, two, there's the land; poor folk cannot get it; Landlords understand too well how to let it : Parmers, once contented, now begin to rile; Swear they're overrented, and they'll show it in a while

And is there no cure for wealth's distribution? Here great riches, lure! there great destitution! Can these camps divided nothing recoucile? So it seems decided, but it's only for a while, Once I saw a ship on a calm sea swaying,

The least finger-tip at its helm obeying:

In the distance beaving rose a cloudy pile,

But men unbelieving mucked it for awhile,-But twas only for a little, for a very little w So a mighty nation, rousing from its sken. Feeling indignation through each fibre creep. ## EVERYDAY LUXURIES

Men can accustom themselves to almost anything in the shape of privation, but they can only do so under pressure of circumstances. There are many people who can contentedly eat a crust of bread and cheese for their dinner when they can get nothing else; but there are few, if any, who are able to do so when they are in a position to pro- a white stripe through the blue, and a cure what is better. Persons generally seem to become as much habituated to luxuries as they do to hard fare; and self-denial, pure and simple, appears to pe practised only af rare intervals. This is a pity.
